The Making of Me on the Road to Emmaus

by Liz Hayden

I came to discover the amazing work of the Congregation of Holy Cross when I entered Stonehill College, a small liberal arts institution founded in 1948 by the Congregation. In the fall of 1972, the admissions leaflet pronounced: “Stonehill - the Making of a Person.” I was intrigued. Forty years later, I can now attest that it had no clue as to the enormous impact the Congregation of Holy Cross would have in the “Making of Me.”

Stonehill is where I met my husband, Jim, “Making of Me.” Congregation of Holy Cross-Stonehill community was there by my side. The community assessed our needs and offered support of all kinds. By Liz Hayden, Congregation of Holy Cross Benefactor

My daughter, Elizabeth, was a sophomore at Stonehill on September 11, 2001, when my husband, Jim, died. My son, John, was a high school senior. Jim was on the second plane flown into the World Trade Center. My family was devastated. Before I had even begun to understand all that had happened, the Holy Cross-Stonehill community was there by my side. The community assessed our needs and offered support of all kinds. The most important aspect to me was knowing that my family and I were not alone, that we would be supported through the trials of an unknown future.

During the months and years after Jim’s death, I was constantly drawn back to the abstract readings, discussions, and papers of my philosophy and religious study classes. The “biggie” questions: What gives our life meaning? How do individuals cope under extreme circumstances beyond their control? Why is there suffering in the world? Where is God? I had a framework based in the tradition of Holy Cross through my classes and professors at Stonehill and this provided me support during a critical period of my life’s reconstruction.

Where was God? God was at my family’s side. Individuals at the Stonehill community and beyond reached out and embraced us in our sorrow and grief along our road to Emmaus. I found great healing and purpose in setting my goals to create a more just and compassionate society. Two years after 9-11, I left my highly coveted teaching position in one of Massachusetts’ highest performing school districts and moved to Boston to volunteer full time at an inner-city, public, gratis school in the District of Perú.

I, along with other faithful Holy Cross supporters, are working together to make this dream a reality. As St. Francis stated, “It is in giving that we receive.”

The Congregation of Holy Cross introduced me to the core questions of human existence, the meaning and purpose of life, and provided mentors and role models of the highest caliber.

I cannot imagine what life would have been like without the Congregation’s imprint during my college years and their continual support throughout my life. The Congregation’s commitment to educate the heart and the mind, to lead lives of justice and compassionate, and to show love and mercy to one another makes us authentic followers of Christ.

Thank you, Congregation of the Holy Cross, for the opportunity to learn who I will become as I journey on the road to Emmaus.
